Support for digs is given

JERUSALEM —

An international committee of scholars, architects, clergymen and civic leaders has urged Israel to continue with archeological excavations denounced by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

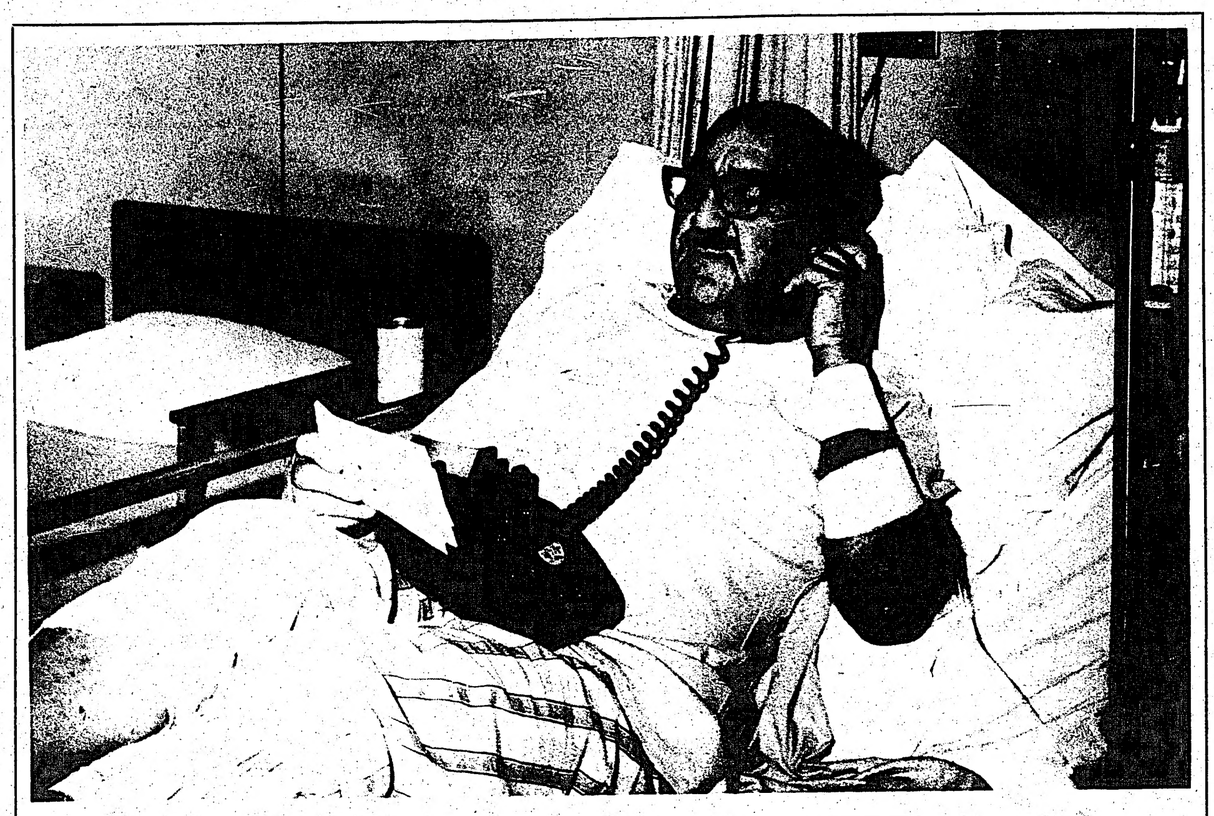
The Jerusalem Committee, established by Mayor Teddy Kollek several years ago to advise the municipality of city improvements, wound up its annual meeting during the weekend with a resolution saying Israel should continue the digs around the ancient city "in the interest of mankind."

The committee, most of whose members are non-Jews, also said Jerusalem should be a united city — "humane and universal." Jerusalem, formerly divided between Jews and Arabs, came under full Israeli control in the Six-Day War of 1967.

The excavations have been carried out near the site of the Wailing Wall — last remnant of the second Jewish temple — and the Al Aqsa mosque, one of Islam's most sacred shrines.

Some members of the committee said they had doubts about the excavations after last year's UNESCO vote, but changed their minds after a close on-site inspection.

The resolution said: "The commitment of the (Israel) Government and the skill of its archeologists have put the civilized world in their debt."



AT LEAST IT'S WARM IN HERE!

It's business as usual for longtime UJA canvasser Sonnee Cohen, despite stay in Branson Hospital. A member of B'nai B'rith Wilson Heights Lodge, Sonnee managed to get more than $1,000 in pledges in two weeks at the hospital. Says Sonnee: "As long as I'm able to canvass, I'm going to do my share, even when I'm flat on my back. I think UJA is that important." He's in hospital for treatment of circulation problem in a leg. Members of UJA films and entertainment division will meet next month in Primrose Club to launch their campaign.

Announces task force phase-out

TORONTO —

The Task Force on Russian Jewry, which was set up six months ago by the United Jewish Welfare Fund to coordinate services for the immigrants, is being phased out. The findings and recommendations that came out of the Task Force, will now be implemented and carried out by the Jewish Immigrant Aid Service.

The announcement of the phase-out came from Phil Granovsky, who had headed the Task Force since its inception last June. "It was set up as a temporary measure and it has fulfilled its function as we had orginally planned," Granovsky explained. "It now properly belongs to the agency most responsible for services to immigrants."

JIAS will, however, extend its services beyond the traditional role it has played in the past. Barry Katz, a social worker, who was added to the full-time professional staff, will handle the special problems encountered by Russian immigrants.

Granovsky emphasized that all enquiries with regard to Russian immigrants should be directed to JIAS at 363-7231.

Abstaining 'worse than a fatuous irrelevancy'

Globe's editorial calls Canada's abstention on ICAO anti-Israel resolution 'shameful'

MONTREAL —

Canada last week abstained in a vote by the International Civil Aviation Organization meeting here on a resolution calling on Israel to stop using Jerusalem airport. The vote by the 30-member ICAO Council was 17 to one with two abstentions and 10 members absent.

The following editorial, highly critical of the government's stand, was published in The Globe & Mail Monday:

"Harassment of Israel by United Nations agencies goes on relentlessly, shattering the argument that these organizations quietly go about their assigned business in isolation from the political prejudices and injustices that afflict the General Assembly.

"The International Civil Aviation Organization is the latest offender. Meeting in Montreal, the 30-member ICAO council voted 17 to 1, with 2 abstentions and 10 members absent, for a resolution calling on Israel to stop using Jerusalem airport.

"This is an intolerable subversion of ICAO, an organization ostensibly devoted to the safety and efficiency of international flight, into a weapon for use by the Arab bloc and its Soviet supporters for the persecution of Israel. It is perhaps not surprising from an organization that for years found itself incapable, in the face of opposition from states like Syria and Libya, to make any effective stand against air hijacking. But, even if predictable, it raises the most profound doubts about ICAO's continued usefulness. How much confidence can we have in an aviation organization that abandons safety as its first priority and dedicates itself to politics instead?

"On this vote Canada, shamefully, abstained.

"The Department of External Affairs offered the explanation that Canada believes the status of Jerusalem, as a political question, was out of place at a technical meeting.

"The belief is sound. But by what weird logic does it become a rationale for abstention? If Canada believed a political resolution to be out of place the only consistent course would have been to vote against the political resolution that was introduced. To abstain was worse than a fatuous irrelevancy; it was to back away from the responsibility to defend ICAO and other UN agencies like it from subversion.

"The fight which Canada fled is not only to protect Israel from a lynching, although that would be cause enough in itself; it is also to protect essential international agencies from transformation into kangaroo courts and to resist the deliberate and reckless destruction of the only world forum we have."

Oppose public school teaching of religion

By JANICE ARNOLD

MONTREAL —

A group named by the Eastern Region of Canadian Jewish Congress told the Committee for non-Catholic, non-Protestant Education of the Superior Council of Education of Quebec, an advisory body to the provincial department of education, that the teaching of religion in the "dogmatic sense" was not the responsibility of a public school.

The Congress representatives, Leon Teitelbaum, chairman of the Eastern Region, Mrs. Dorothy Sirota, Mrs. Mickey Bregman (both members of the Protestant School Board of Greater Montreal), Prof. Marvin Butovsky, Felix Meloul, Carl Laxer, Dr. Samuel Lewin and Ted Baker, asserted that while a public school system was essential in any democratic society, religious and moral instruction belonged outside the classroom. .

"Religion in public schools has a dividing effect on the children. It's not fair that some children must leave the room when the others take part in prayers or Bible instruction," said Teitelbaum.

At present, 65% of Jewish children are enrolled in Protestant schools in Montreal and account for roughly 11% of the total school population. While religious teaching has been greatly reduced in Protestant school over the last 10 years it has not disappeared entirely.

"In a multicultural society such as ours, there can be no doubt that here, possibly more than in other lands, a special stress is needed on that aspect of public education which aims at the deepening of our concept of our citizenship and which will tend to a more profound and enduring mutual understanding of the various racial, cultural and religious differences in our make-up," Mrs. Sirota told those present at the meeting.

Asked if abstention from religious instruction applied equally to Roman Catholic schools, Teitelbaum said it

Huge arms deals made by Arabs since 1973 war

NEW YORK [JTA] —

Israeli Defence Minister Shimon Peres said here last week that 10 Arab countries have signed $19 billion worth of arms deals since the Yom Kippur War, "half from the West and half from the East" which makes them, from the point of view of armaments, "larger than the NATO force" in Europe.

Peres also presented a detailed breakdown of the armed strength of the so-called confrontation states on Israel's borders. But he assured the more than 2,000 people attending the United Jewish Appeal Conference Dinner at the New York Hilton Hotel that while Israel does not underestimate this force "we can and shall repulse them."

Peres said that while he could not go into details, Israel possesses the strength to face the concentrated Arab power if necessary and "she will retain this ability for the foreseeable future."

According to the Israeli defence chief, "Those Arab states which confront Israel have today 22 armored divisions; 40 tank brigades; 8,100 tanks; 4,800 artillery pieces; about 1,000 ground-to-ground missiles; 1,980 attack aircraft; 150 helicopters; 200 batteries of ground-to-air missiles; 12 submarines; 12 destroyers; 65 airfields and 22 naval bases on the Mediterranean and Red Seas." He said they have under arms a combined total of 1.5 million men or "for every man, boy and child in Israel there is one Arab soldier."

Rabin is still determined to boycott Council debate

JERUSALEM [JCNS] —

Both Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Defence Minister Shimon Peres are still determined Israel will not change her mind and take part in the debate on the Middle East question at the United Nations Security Council Jan. 12.

Israel decided not to attend on learning that the Palestine Liberation Organization was likely to take part.

Despite last week's assault by Labor Party moderates on his policies, particularly concerning his hard-line attitude to the Palestinian question, and the plea by U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger that Israel should attend the debate, Rabin has indicated privately that he will not alter his views.

He feels any agreement now by Israel to participate in the debate, and any announcement that Israel is ready to take part in talks with any Palestinian group recognizing Israel, might cause the United States to make a "fatal error" of thinking that Israel was weakening in her fundamental opposition to the idea of a Palestinian state.

A number of Labor leaders, including cabinet ministers and former foreign minister Abba Eban have recently expressed support for the prime minister's policies and are seeking to quash any moves aimed at removing Rabin from office. But it is feared that on the Palestinian issue particularly, there could well be a further attack on his position from the "doves" in the party.

Meanwhile, in Stockholm, 34 members of the Swedish Parliament have strongly criticized the fact that their own government voted at the UN Security Council to allow the Palestine Liberation Organization to take part in the Council's debate.

The result has been that Sweden has been thanked by

PLO entry to Canada not among top items on CIC agenda: Bick

By TOBA KORENBLUM
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO —

The Canada-Israel Committee appears to be engaged in a delicate high-wire act — trying to satisfy Jewish community sentiments without upsetting its relationship with the Canadian government.

While the CIC, in a statement released last week, says it is unalterably opposed to PLO entry into Canada, it has come to the "realistic" conclusion, its spokesmen confirm, that pressing its case before the government, with regard to Habitat, would be ill-advised. (Ottawa maintains that 'non-terrorist' PLO personnel will be allowed to enter this country for the UN meeting.)

CIC Executive Director Meyer Bick called the government "wrong in principle and fact" with regard to its policy on Habitat and the PLO, but added, "in terms of the agenda of the Canadian Jewish community vis-a-vis Israel, PLO entry into Canada is important, but not among the top items on our list."

When asked whether its attempt at balancing communal interest against the government stance had watered down the CIC statement formalized last week, Bick remarked: "We are keeping options open." The statement, he continued, was deliberately "open-ended. The only thing missing was a phrase like 'we're going to fight the government'. There is no reason to say that. It won't accomplish anything."

This cautious approach to Habitat and other key areas of the CIC policy paper, was reflected in the comments of the national leaders of CIC's constituent organizations: Canadian Zionist Federation President Phil Givens, Canadian Jewish Congress President Sydney Harris and B'nai B'rith President William Morris, as well as CIC Central Region Chairman Rabbi Erwin Schild. (National CIC Vice-Chairman Rabbi Gunther Plaut was out of the city and unavailable for comment.)

Translating what they felt to be the essence of the CIC policy statement, all were united in the belief that:

— there are larger issues which demand Canada's attention, other than dwelling on Habitat (the pressure campaign to discredit Israel at the UN, Russian immigration were mentioned);

— while the government's position on Habitat was inconsistent, they were realistically resigned to it;

— the conference should continue as planned, even with PLO participation and — peaceful demonstrations and an educational attack launched against the PLO at Habitat would serve a useful purpose in drawing Canadian public attention to Israel's case.

Remarked Givens: "It is awkward to keep giving the government crap when there are things it has done that are laudable (its action during General Assembly and UNESCO votes, he noted). Habitat will come and go, but there are many other things that demand the government's consideration with respect to Israel."

Commented Morris: The government position on the PLO is "absolutely contradictory, but we have no choice, they are going to go ahead with Habitat whether we like it or not...some leaders have spoken out of turn by calling for the cancellation of the conference."

Said Harris: "Many members of the Jewish and non-Jewish communities have already made plain their feelings, it's now in the government's hands."

Concluded Schild: "No, I don't think the CIC should pressure the government on this issue. I don't think it such a tremendous issue that we should go to war with our own government... I am realistic enough to know that the government has made up its mind that Habitat will take place. This is a fact."

The CIC spokesmen were also unanimous in their reading of an ambiguous portion of the CIC statement referring to Palestinian self-determination. "The Arab Palestinians have a legitimate right for self-expression alongside a Jewish state in the Middle East," the statement concluded.

When questioned whether this, in fact, seemingly meant the CIC was advocating a separate Palestinian state in the Mideast, each came to the same conclusion: no, not necessarily.

"This is an unfortunate use of words," remarked Morris, "that is ambiguous." He explained: "It refers to the rights of Palestinian Arabs to choose their own destiny...the state of Israel is best qualified to decide what that solution might be."

Commented Schild: "We do not deny the existence of the Palestine entity. The Palestinian Arabs have a right to sovereignty...but, Israel cannot tolerate an 'Arafat state' on the West Bank. It doesn't have to be a separate state from Jordan."

Said Bick: "By and large, the Canadian Jewish community recognizes the Palestinians' rights... Solutions are possible, but it is not for us to define those limits. There has to be a compromise on both sides."

The Palestinians, he said, would have to recognize Israel's legitimacy and right to existence. What concessions would Israel have to make then? This, Bick explained, he was not in a position to discuss.

'Purge ex-Nazis in government'

By S.K. LAZAROV

TORONTO —

Beate Klarsfeld, hailed by Jews as the throbbing conscience of West Germany, urged her fellow Germans here recently to purge their government of Nazi employees and to disallow the rehabilitation of war criminals.

Beate Klarsfeld

Speaking on "Wherever They May Be — A Report on Nazis Around The World," Mrs. Klarsfeld, reputedly the female equivalent of Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal, told an audience at the University of Toronto that the new and untainted generation of German youth must fight actively against anti-Semitism and display solidarity with the Jewish people and the state of Israel.

The 36-year-old, red-headed Protestant, who achieved international fame, or notoriety, in 1968 when she slapped the face of West German Chancellor Kurt-George Kiesinger, disclosed that she considers it her duty to assume all these responsibilities in an attempt to do penance for her generation.

She confessed that at times she feels depressed and weary in her efforts to track down German war criminals, but added she has no intention to relent in her struggle because anti-Semitism is far from dead in her homeland.

Reading from a prepared text Mrs. Klarsfeld told about 200 persons at the Medical Science Auditorium how she became involved in her personal crusade to cleanse West Germany of Nazi influence.

Her parents, she said, did not tell her about the Nazi atrocities, and it was only after she married Serge Klarsfeld, a French Jew whose father was gassed at Auschwitz, did she become passionately involved in her present work.

Mrs. Klarsfeld, who was in Toronto to publicize her new book, Wherever They May Be!, warned that West Germans "feel less inhibited" about voicing anti-Semitic

Arms aid said not unfriendly

PARIS [JTA] —

French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing said here that France's decision to help the Arabs build an arms industry of their own should not be considered an unfriendly gesture towards Israel.

Speaking at Orly Airport upon his return from a five-day official visit to Egypt as the guest of President Anwar Sadat, Giscard d'Estaing said, "Egypt's choice of France (for building the arms industry) strikes me as wise. Israel ought to consider that France's policy aims at peace in the Middle East." He added, "It is only natural for Egypt's leaders to organize their own security."

Precise details on the arms industry which will be set up are not yet known. Reports from Cairo say it will be a three-party affair with France supplying the technical know-how, Egypt the manpower, and the Gulf States — Saudi Arabia, Qatar and Kuwait — the funds estimated at $9 billion. France has also agreed to help Egypt set up a nuclear industry of its own and build atomic piles which, Egypt hopes, will supply the country with half its energy requirements by 1985.

Giscard d'Estaing's visit has also helped boost Sadat's prestige within the Arab world and co-ordinate Franco-Egyptian policies and diplomatic moves. France believes Sadat to be "a moderating force" in the Middle East and plans to encourage him. This view, French sources here said, will also be made known to the other, more extremist Arab states, such as Syria and Iraq.

Greater restraint needed in private consumption

JERUSALEM [JCNS] —

Israelis are faced with having to make even heavier voluntary sacrifice if the country is to maintain a reasonable defence budget.

Prime Minister Rabin said last week there would be tough times ahead if these sacrifices were not made. Addressing the Labor Alignment's economic committee, he said Israelis must accept changes in lifelong habits and accept drastic cuts in private consumption. There would have to be greater efficiency in production and public services.

The United States, the prime minister warned, would not commit itself to providing long-term aid to Israel on the level of this year's massive allocation. He also did not expect there would be any significant increase in contributions from world Jewry.

POLISH WIPEOUT

WARSAW (JCNS) —

Continuing their determination to erase all references to the millenium-long history of Polish Jewry and the evidence of Jewish tragedy during the Holocaust, the Polish authorities, who recently destroyed the last part of the Warsaw Ghetto wall, have also erased any reference to 600,000 Jews being killed at the Belzec extermination camp. A Jewish cemetery in Czestochowa has been destroyed and replaced by a foundry.

UNESCO director resigns

PARIS —

The UNESCO director of information has resigned, effective at the end of this year, in protest of the organization's anti-Israel resolutions and the General Assembly's decision to equate Zionism with racism.

The resignation of Joel Blocker, 41, a former Newsweek staffer, was a talking point of the opening session of a UNESCO conference here.

At the opening session, the Algerian delegation called on the conference to adopt amendments making the fight against Zionism mandatory. The delegate said, "Israel is an imperialist state, it is ruled by Zionist ideology which is comparable to apartheid and war propaganda."

This stand was supported by Iraq and the delegate from Byelorussia. This is the first time since UNESCO adopted anti-Israeli resolutions last year that an Israeli delegation attended a UNESCO-sponsored conference.

Zionist program launched

NEW YORK —

In an effort to present undistorted facts about Zionism, the American Zionist Federation has initiated an educational program which will provide all delegations to the United Nations with basic information about the origin, philosophies, aims and achievements of the Zionist movement.

The first material was mailed to the delegations early this week, and included Herzl's book The Jewish State and a publication The Historical Balance Sheet of Zionist Ideology, by Shlomo Dinur.

Israeli moderates form group to work for Palestinian state

TEL AVIV [JCNS] —

Although there is no sign of a shift in the Israeli government's decision not to attend the United Nations Security Council debate on the Middle East on Jan. 12, because of the expected presence there of the Palestine Liberation Organization, there are firm moves among some Israeli moderates towards a plan to bring about a Palestinian state alongside Israel.

A group of Israelis known for their liberal views on the Middle East dispute, have formed an organization called "Israel Council for Peace between Israel and Palestine."

Its aim is to work for an independent Palestinian state through negotiations, based on mutual recognition.

Last week, leaders of this group held an inaugural meeting at which it was claimed that the PLO had changed its views as a result of contacts abroad between members of the group and the terrorists, and that the PLO was now prepared for coexistence with Israel.

The campaign to change government opinion was launched to try to bring about self-determination for Palestine Arabs and their right to establish their own state alongside Israel. A dialogue with "every Palestinian sector" which would recognize Israel, was proposed.

Heading the new council as honorary president, it is reported, is Eliyahu Elichar, a leader of Sephardi Jews in Israeli. He was a member in 1948 of the first Knesset. He recently published a book, Life with the Palestinians, in which he accused Israel's pioneer leaders of causing the state to become "like an island" in the middle of the Arabs.

Soviet Jewry feared for

NEW YORK [JCNS] —

The Soviet Union might use the recent United Nations resolution equating Zionism with racism as a weapon with which to declare war on Soviet Jews, Eugene Gold, chairman of the Greater New York Conference on Soviet Jewry, said when he addressed a news conference here.

Key Jewish leaders took part in an all-day leadership conference aimed at working out new strategies to assure the survival of Soviet Jewry.

Gold said the United Nations resolution was planned in the Kremlin as part of a global anti-Jewish conspiracy, and there was a strong likelihood that Russia would use that insidious document to justify its oppression of Jews — particularly those wishing to emigrate.

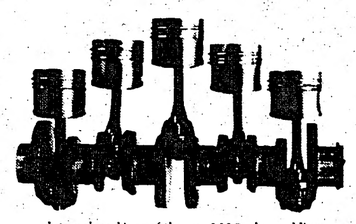
Unquestionably one of the best investments of our time-the new Mercedes-Benz 300D

Again Mercedes-Benz quietly astonishes the engineering world.

The new Mercedes-Benz 300 D.
The world's only 5-cylinder automobile.



Internal workings of the new 300D, the world's only 5-cylinder automobile.

Mercedes-Benz pioneers yet another engineering milestone: a 5-cylinder Diesel engine that rivals today's gasoline engines in smoothness, quietness and power—while providing the unmatched economy and durability inherent in Mercedes-Benz Diesels since we introduced the world's first production Diesel passenger car in 1936.

The 300D clearly flies in the face of engineering convention. It establishes a whole new category of Diesel—a whole new category of automobile.

Why a 5-cylinder?

Mercedes-Benz wanted to make a performance Diesel. A new car that had much greater horsepower and torque, but did not sacrifice the economy and reliability of previous Mercedes-Benz Diesels.

Nearly four decades of Diesel experience told the Mercedes-Benz engineers that a major power increase would have to come from an entirely different engine. Not one with bigger cylinders—one with more cylinders.

If engineering convention were to be served, the next step up from our standard 4-cylinder Diesel should have been a 6-cylinder engine. But because of the unusual strength necessities particular to all Diesels, it follows that a 6-cylinder Diesel would have to be substantially larger and heavier than a 4-cylinder.

The Mercedes-Benz solution was typically unconventional: A 5-cylinder Diesel engine.

The most advanced Diesel

The 5-cylinder Diesel engine was a technical challenge for Mercedes-Benz engineers. But, they made it work.

The new engine's size was set at 3 liters. Torque was raised nearly 20%. Horsepower was up a full 25% over any previous Mercedes-Benz Diesel. The result is the new 300D, the most advanced Diesel passenger automobile. For a full descriptive brochure on the 300D, the well-known 240D, and other Mercedes-Benz models, write to Mercedes-Benz of Canada Limited, 849 Eglinton Ave. E., Toronto, Ontario, M4G 2L5.

Performance, economy, luxury

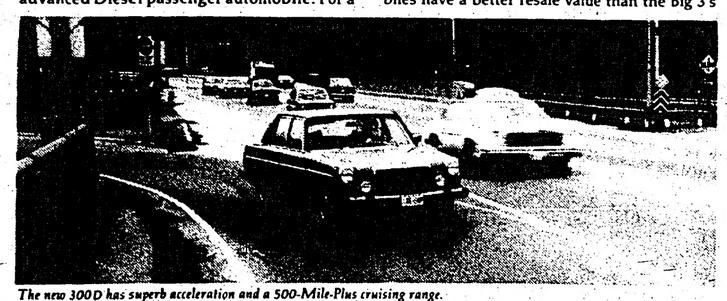
While the new 300D acts like an economy car, it doesn't look or feel like one. In every major appointment, the 300D is equal to the Mercedes-Benz 280 Sedan. It blends performance and economy in a luxury package.

A final thought. No manufacturer anywhere in the world has a greater safety involvement than Mercedes-Benz. Evidence of the decades of Mercedes-Benz safety engineering is everywhere in the 300 Diesel.

The best resale value

The record shows that Mercedes-Benz automobiles have a better resale value than the Big 3's standard or luxury cars. This reassuring fact, along with many other unique attributes, combine to make the new Mercedes-Benz 300D an exceptional investment.

The most enjoyable and rewarding method of evaluating any Mercedes-Benz automobile, however, is the test drive. Just contact your local Mercedes-Benz dealer.



The new 300D has superb acceleration and a 500-Mile-Plus cruising range.

29 mpg in town,
37 on the highway

According to the most recent U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's test report, the new 300D can get up to 29 mpg in city driving, and up to 37 mpg on the open highway. And since Diesel fuel is usually cheaper than gasoline, the 300D goes more miles on cheaper gallons.

Debate on whether Zionism is racist no more than verbal slinging match

By Sheldon Kirshner
Staff Reporter

HAMILTON —
It was billed as a reasoned debate but it was nothing of the kind. It was a verbal slinging match, a sad and disturbing commentary bespeaking the vast intellectual and emotional chasm dividing the proponents of Zionism and the advocates of Palestinian nationalism.

Poet Irving Layton and Palestinian author Sami Hadawi were to have addressed themselves to the subject of whether Zionism is a form of racism, but neither man marshalled convincing arguments by the time CHCH-TV's The Great Debate was over.

Hadawi, a calm and collected Jerusalem-born Palestinian Christian, made several attempts at linking Zionism with racism. But Layton, a York University English professor, avoided the topic, and instead, attacked Arab countries for oppressing ethnic and religious minorities in their midst.

The audience, a fair number of whom appeared to be Canadians of Arab descent, was easily swayed by Hadawi's rejoinders and they voted 69 to 45 in favor of the resolution condemning Zionism as a type of racism.

Terming Zionism racist in character and practice, Hadawi, a bespectacled man in his 60s, said he detested Zionism more than Layton hated Nazism. Yet he amended his opinion somewhat when he declared that the "spiritual" brand of Zionism put forward by Ahad Ha'am was "recognized and respected" by Palestinians.

Spiritual Zionism, as opposed to Theodor Herzl's political Zionism, called for the creation of a Jewish cultural and religious homeland rather than a constituted sovereign state in Palestine.

Hadawi said the political Zionism of Chaim Weizmann and the "extreme Zionism" of Vladimir Jabotinsky were alien to the traditions of Judaism and repugnant to some pious Jews such as the Nuturi Karta sect.

Irving Layton

Layton, his voice rising emotionally, lashed out against what he called the Arab tradition of "intolerance, fanaticism and oppression" practiced against minorities. He mentioned the harsh Arab treatment of Egyptian Copts and Iraqi Kurds; he castigated the Egyptian air force for having used poison in bombing rebels in Yemen and decried the ousting of ethnic Italians from Libya and the slaughter of Nilotic blacks in Sudan.

He told of the Arab slave trade in Africa and of the various social and economic disabilities Jews in Arab lands suffered. Pointedly, he asked why there had been no compensation for Jews who left Arab countries.

Contrasting the Arabs' maltreatment of minorities with Israel's attitude towards her 400,000 Arab citizens, Layton said Israeli Arabs have the highest standard of living in the Middle East.

At two points in the debate, Layton seemingly discredited himself with the audience by characterizing African nations that voted for the UN anti-Zionist resolution as "backward" and by confusing a legendary remark by Chaim Weizmann that he sought to create a Jewish state as Jewish as England was English.

Despite the rhetoric, he did not try to prove why Zionism is — antithetical to racism.

Reacting to Layton's comments, Hadawi laughingly called them absurd and ridiculous, adding: "He's done nothing to indicate why Zionism is not racist!"

Launching an assault on Zionism, Hadawi, a well-read and well-prepared debater, charged that Israeli Arabs are third-class citizens while Oriental Jews are second-class citizens. He said the Law of Return was racialistic in content, and claimed that according to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights his right to return to his homeland was thwarted by Israel.

Layton, falling back on his contention that the Arabs cannot label Zionism as racist because of their own poor record in dealing with minorities, said Hadawi's accusations were "obscene and preposterous."

We should not confuse the PLO with all Arabs,' Winnipeg gathering told

By A.J. ARNOLD

WINNIPEG —
The recent gathering of Winnipeg Jewry at the Rosh Pina Synagogue was hardly the first time in recent years that there has been a mass meeting at a local synagogue in support of a crisis situation in Jewish life, but this one was different.

Some 700 to 800 people, about two-thirds of the synagogue's capacity, turned out to the meeting where the special speakers were Rabbi Gunther Plaut of Toronto, Canada-Israel Committee vice-chairman, and Dr. Leon Kronitz of Montreal, Canadian Zionist Federation executive vice-president.

The audience picked up the "support Zionism" buttons, and received a kit with a resolution condemning the UN resolution and reaffirming commitment to Israel and Zionism. It also contained the UN resolution and Canadian reaction to it, along with brief explanation and reaffirming what can be done to combat anti-Zionism.

Rabbi Plaut made a stirring address and Leon Kronitz echoed him in Yiddish.

While welcoming recent Canadian government policy on Israel at the UN, Rabbi Plaut felt it was "insensitive" to grant a ministerial permit for entry to Canada to PLO delegate Shafik Al Hout, particularly in the "week of agony after the UN stole our dream.

"Even if Israel may have to sit down with the PLO," Rabbi Plaut declared, "and even if, due to the exigencies of the moment, the PLO will attend the Habitat conference, outside of that there is no reason for such people to be admitted to Canada by ministerial permit.

"We should not confuse the PLO with all the Arabs," Plaut added, "because Israel can only survive in peace with the Arabs. But for this the PLO must change its approach.

"We recognize," Plaut affirmed, "that Arabs are not the enemies of the Jewish people — nor are we their enemies. The real enemy is not in Damascus or Cairo, but in Moscow," he declared.

"If something happens to Israel," he warned, "it will happen to all the West. Christian and Jewish fate is intertwined. For us to say we are all alone is no longer true — if it ever was."

He expressed the view that with the adoption of the UN anti-Zionist resolution the situation in the world body has "bottomed out." In support of this view, he pointed out the foreign minister of Mexico had already been to Israel to apologize for his government's position on the UN vote and a Jewish delegation had gone to Mexico to hear a statement from the president of that country, disavowing Mexico's UN vote.

David Zlot will chair committee

TORONTO —
David Zlot was unanimously elected to serve as chairman of the Toronto City Committee of the Labor Zionist Alliance following the death of Hye Kirshenbaum.

Zlot was born in London, England in April, 1916 and came with his parents to Canada in 1918. In his younger years, he belonged to Gordonia Youth Organization. He served for many years as vice-chairman of the Toronto Labor Zionist Alliance and is past chairman of its Frontier Branch 513.

Zlot is a member of the national executive of the Labor Zionist Alliance as well as the Labor Zionist Movement of Canada. He is a board member of the Bialik Hebrew Day School and of the Committee for Labor Israel (Histadrut).

American pressure and Arab threats may stop settlement of occupied lands

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

From the snow-bound Golan Heights to the scorching Sinai desert, Israel is "creating facts" — establishing settlements, ranging in size from paramilitary agricultural nahalim to incipient cities.

Fifty-five settlements have been built since the Six Day War and the prospect is that Jerusalem will continue to "create facts" — "facts" which upset her friend and ally, the United States, infuriate the Arabs and worry Israeli politicians on the right and left of the political spectrum.

The criticism emanating from Washington is triggered by the perception that settlements in Arab lands constitute another obstacle to a compromise peace founded on territorial concessions. This is a view that is held by most of Israel's friends in Western Europe and South America. In an editorial, The New York Times amplified these misgivings: "The policy of colonizing selected regions in the occupied territories may have had some strategic merit initially, as a measure of front-line defence after the 1967 war. But by now...this practice is coming to resemble deliberate territorial expansion. Instead of helping defend cease-fire lines, civilian settlements only create new positions which have to be defended."

To the Arabs, the settlements reveal the warlike and expansionist face of Israeli policy. According to Mohammed Heikal, former editor of Cairo's Al Ahram, President Sadat launched the Yom Kippur War when he concluded that the Israelis would never return Egyptian territory voluntarily. Two years after the war, the Arabs reiterate that a fifth war is inevitable unless Israel disbands the settlements and evacuates the occupied areas.

Israeli politicians opposed to the settlements argue that they inhibit the reigning government from displaying flexibility and imagination in negotiating with the Arabs. Some say the West Bank ought to be turned over to a moderate Palestinian leadership able and willing to set up a Palestinian state. Others say that the retention of Arab lands pose a long-term threat to the Jewishness of Israel because of the exploding Arab birth rate.

Still and all, the majority of Israelis, especially adherents of the National Religious Party, more or less agree with the government's settlement policy. And sympathizers of the Gush Emunim movement, inspired by biblical messianism and religious fervor, insistently urge Jerusalem to expand the scope of its settlement program on the West Bank. Gush Emunim is a small group but its influence is pervasive. Consequently, the feeling in Israel is that a general election would have to be called if the government had no choice but to hand back parts of the West Bank to Jordan or a Palestinian leadership.

Of all the settlements in the occupied areas by far the largest and most ambitious is Yamit. Situated among palm trees and rolling sand dunes just south of the Gaza Strip, Yamit is a major cornerstone of Israel's settlement policy.

The Israelis covet the region around Yamit for strategic, political and economic reasons. A creation of ex-defence minister Moshe Dayan, Yamit sits astride the traditional coastal route to Sinai. For centuries, armies have fought for possession of the area. In addition to military considerations, Yamit would also be an ideal location for Israel's much-needed third Mediterranean port.

Politically, Israeli planners see Yamit in terms of a buffer zone between the Gaza Strip and the Sinai. Pundits speculate that in a final peace agreement Israel would probably be willing to draw the border somewhere between El Arish and Rafah, both of which are in close proximity to Yamit.

Originally, Yamit was to have been far bigger than it will actually be. Israeli officials envisaged a population of 250,000, a port, an international airport, a university, housing developments and industrial parks. The vast plan so startled the Egyptians that they came to the conclusion that Israel would not relinquish the Sinai without bloodletting.

Young Israelis are making an attempt to settle Sebastia on the West Bank. Israel has established 55 settlements in the occupied Arab territories since the Six Day War. The settlement policy is opposed by some elements in Israel and by U.S. State Department. (IPPA)

Although the government has scaled down its grandiose plans for Yamit, Jerusalem is hardly abandoning its controversial settlement policy; realists within and without Israel know that the settlements are a clear reflection of the government's intentions in the occupied Arab territories. Much time and money have been invested in the building of the settlements (which supposedly are Israel's first defence line), and there is resistance to returning the occupied areas for uncertain political concessions from the Arabs.

As one official told an American correspondent: "A country as hard-pressed financially as Israel doesn't invest fortunes in settlements just to give them up."

Whether this attitude survives the vicissitudes of American pressure and Arab threats to resort to war is difficult to ascertain. But if the current "disengagement" atmosphere in the Middle East thrives for the next few years, Israel will indoubtedly have to give up many of the settlements in the Sinai, West Bank, Gaza Strip and Golan Heights.

Mexico's diplomatic gyrations confuse rather than enlighten

Mexican diplomacy must be in a shambles in the wake of President Echeverria's embarrassed disavowal of the United Nations resolution equating Zionism with racism. Last month, Mexico joined 71 countries denouncing Zionism as racism, and her position not only hurt but stunned the Israelis, who had come to believe that Mexico was one of Israel's unwavering friends in an increasingly hostile world. That perception of Mexican policy was reinforced last August when Luis Echeverria paid a state visit to Israel.

Pundits are still trying to piece together the reasons for Mexico's shocking Nov. 10 vote. But the consensus of opinion seems to be that President Echeverria, eyeing the UN secretary-generalship, sold his country's soul to the highest bidder in the hope of currying favor with the powerful Arab-Soviet bloc. The president, undoubtedly, was probably also thinking of the economic benefits his nation's anti-Zionist stance might produce.

There is no sure way of knowing why President Echeverria reversed himself on such a crucial issue of principle. Perhaps the United States informed him that she would oppose his ambitions at the UN. Or perhaps he came to the belated conclusion that Arab promises are not necessarily equivalent to hard economic investments, which Mexico seeks.

What is known, however, is that the Mexican tourist industry, a mainstay of the economy, suffered sharp reverses in the aftermath of Mexico's callow vote. Tens of thousands of Jews who normally spend a week or two there abruptly cancelled their reservations, and instead, went to Caribbean islands whose governments are sympathetic to Israel and whose leaders realize that the equation of Zionism with racism is a philosophical crime.

Threatened by a disastrous tourist season, and stung by the revelation that Washington might not encourage President Echeverria's UN aspirations, Mexico City had second thoughts about the entire matter. They dispatched their foreign minister, Emilio Rabassa, to meet Ephraim Evron, deputy director of the Israeli foreign ministry, in Rome. According to the diplomatic correspondent of The Jerusalem Post, Mr. Evron's instructions were to discourage Mr. Rabassa from visiting Israel. In Jerusalem's view, there was nothing to discuss. But when the humbled foreign minister disclosed that his country wished to publicly reverse her stand on Zionism, Jerusalem wisely relented.

Mr. Rabassa laid a wreath at Mt. Herzl, a symbolic gesture considering that Theodor Herzl was the founder of political Zionism. At a dinner held in his honor by Israel's foreign minister, Yigal Allon, Mr. Rabassa made the appropriate apologies. "Where there is no discrimination, there can be no racism — and there is no discrimination in Zion," he declared before his hosts.

President Echeverria himself delivered the final statement of remorse and regret in Mexico City when he assured representatives of American Jewish organizations that his government "in no way identified Zionism with racism." The chastened Echeverria went one step further by saying that in the future Mexican votes at the UN "cannot be misinterpreted or misunderstood as equating Zionism with racism or opposing the national aspirations of the Jewish people."

One would have thought that the statements of President Echeverria and his foreign minister could be taken for face value. But perhaps that was a vain hope. Last week, in a vote which Israel's Davar termed "shamefully cynical," Mexico's delegation at the United Nations cast its ballot in favor of the so-called declaration on women which urged action against colonialism, racial discrimination — and Zionism. Mexico, seeking to mollify Jewish public opinion, hurriedly explained that she did not really agree with the article equating Zionism with racism.

Before last week, it appeared that Mexico had recanted and that Jews, in turn, would reconsider their boycott of Mexican resorts. Indeed, it was gratifying that Mexico had come to her senses on such a vital question. Yet now everything seems in doubt again, and the president of the American Jewish Congress announced that he saw no reason for lifting the tourist boycott.

Mexico's unsophisticated diplomatic gyrations, designed to appease Arabs and Jews, are not only strange and disquieting but also sadly reminiscent of the thrashing contortions of a banana republic.

U.S. must stand up to Arab boycott

For months, U.S. Secretary of Commerce Rogers C.B. Morton refused to release to Congress a list of American firms observing the Arab boycott against Israel. Mr. Morton argued that the Export Administration Act of 1965 compelled him to keep this potentially damaging list secret unless he thought it was in the national interest to make public the firms' names.

Facing a contempt citation for refusing to turn over the material to a House subcommittee investigating the boycott, Mr. Morton finally relented. The information he so assiduously concealed in the "national interest" is now part of the public domain and it is nothing short of shocking.

It transpires that a large number of American firms have indeed complied with the boycott; and in nearly three-fourths of 50,000 trading transactions with Arab countries, U.S. firms declined to tell the government whether they had adhered to the Arab demands to ostracize Israel.

How this incredible disclosure can be reconciled with a commerce department pledge that it will no longer disseminate foreign trade opportunities or tenders that contain boycott conditions, is difficult to ascertain. Companies intent on doing business with the Arab states will surely do so at the expense of Israel if there are no firm laws to stop them in their tracks.

President Ford recently announced a series of supposedly tough measures to protect American citizens and businesses against discrimination arising from foreign boycotts. They would bar any bias based on race, color, religion, sex or national origin, and would penalize exporters who dropped Jewish suppliers at the demand of Arab customers, or banks that refused credit to Jewish borrowers in order to attract deposits by Arab investors.

Unfortunately, the new rules do not in any way block an American business from complying with the boycott. The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith charged that the program failed to come to grips with the full scope of the boycott since legislation still was needed to ensure that compliance with the boycott was made illegal. While the Export Administration Act states that it is U.S. policy "to oppose restrictive trade practices or boycotts fostered or imposed by foreign countries against other countries friendly to the United States," few concrete steps have thus far been taken to enforce the policy.

Neither, it appears, has anything substantive been done about combatting the odious practice of excluding Jewish Americans from participating in government programs in the Arab world. The American Jewish Congress, in a suit filed against Secretary of State Kissinger and three other cabinet members, accuses them of violating the rights of U.S. Jews by allowing them to be excluded from government-supported programs in Saudi Arabia because of religious discrimination practiced by that country.

Despite the grandiloquent proclamations and occasional public relations gestures on the part of the White House and commerce department, pitifully little has been done to eradicate the Arab boycott. The situation calls for immediate rectification.

Iraqi repatriation offer propaganda

Iraq, one of Israel's most implacable foes, inserted a half-page ad in a number of European and American newspapers entitled "Iraqi Jews Invited to Return to Iraq." The 150,000 Jews who once lived in that ancient land but who are now dispersed throughout the world, were promised a grab-bag of goodies: constitutional rights, equality and a secure, discrimination-free existence.

The offer sounds fine on paper, but the trouble is that few Jews in their right minds would want to uproot themselves for the dubious pleasure of returning to a country which besmirched its reputation by hanging Jews in public and which still considers the handful of Jews in its midst fifth columnists and worse.

Obviously, the enticing ad is nothing but a sophisticated piece of propaganda whose twin purposes are to intensify the anti-Zionist campaign by legitimizing the concept of a secular state, and to undermine Israel's oft-repeated contention that a Jewish state exists because of traditional European and Arab mistreatment of Jews.

Few Iraqi Jews will even respond to the ad, but more than a few will remember that there were indeed some very bright and brilliant moments in Iraqi Jewish history. Twenty-seven years after the creation of the state of Israel, these dim memories are nothing but an historical echo.

In retrospect, it seems incredible that a flourishing Jewish community existed in Iraq. The rulers in Baghdad do not really wish to resurrect this community; they merely wish to exploit and manipulate the emotions of the West for propagandistic aims.

What Really Happened

Diligent efforts of Lazarus Cohen rescued colonists

By A.J. ARNOLD

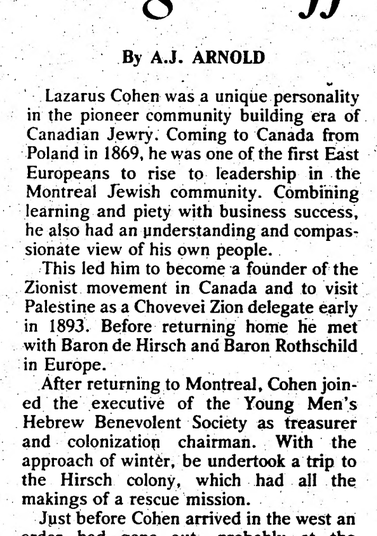
Lazarus Cohen was a unique personality in the pioneer community building era of Canadian Jewry. Coming to Canada from Poland in 1869, he was one of the first East Europeans to rise to leadership in the Montreal Jewish community. Combining learning and piety with business success, he also had an understanding and compassionate view of his own people.

This led him to become a founder of the Zionist movement in Canada and to visit Palestine as a Chovevei Zion delegate early in 1893. Before returning home he met with Baron de Hirsch and Baron Rothschild in Europe.

After returning to Montreal, Cohen joined the executive of the Young Men's Hebrew Benevolent Society as treasurer and colonization chairman. With the approach of winter, he undertook a trip to the Hirsch colony, which had all the makings of a rescue mission.

Just before Cohen arrived in the west an order had gone out, probably at the directive of W.H. Baker, to serve legal notice on the delinquent settlers who had refused to sign liens. Although he was accompanied by Baker, Cohen had his own approach. On hearing of the new lien action, he urged it be forestalled, and Homestead Inspector Allison undertook to intercept the messenger, who was already on the way to the colony to serve the legal notices on the settlers.

Cohen reached the colony on Nov. 23 and quickly won the esteem of the colonists. He also made a deep impression on W.H. Allison, who immediately concluded he would render valuable service and prove "an excellent and judicious mediator." Cohen worked "assiduously" for the benefit of the colonists, the Homestead Inspector reported. He spared no pains to determine their actual conditions and to suggest the best means for their assistance. And while doing this he persuaded them all to sign their liens without legal notice.



Lazarus Cohen, unique Canadian pioneer.

Having recently visited Baron de Hirsch, Cohen told Allison that the baron was unhappy with the manner of distributing funds to the colonists. Nevertheless, he had been asked to determine what further amount would be necessary to help them in the coming year. The government would also be asked to help but only to provide seed grain.

Cohen advised the settlers to organize their own committee to govern the affairs of the colony, and before he left at the end of December they addressed a letter to him thanking him for his diligent efforts in their behalf.

By mid-January, Ascher Pierce received confirmation from Montreal that the help promised by Cohen would indeed be coming and early in February, 1894, the settlers elected a colonists committee.

A letter was immediately sent to Montreal asking that only requests from the colonists' committee should be accepted on behalf of the settlement. The committee undertook the distribution of provisions to Jewish settlers inside and outside the colony.

An inventory was taken of the livestock held by the "inside colonists" — the 38 families who signed mortgage liens — and between them they had 61 oxen, 48 cows, 26 calves and 23 horses. The committee developed a work plan and recommendations were made as to which settlers needed new oxen or horses to do better work.

Seed grain requirements were outlined and the committee reported that the land had not yet been cultivated to the point where it could be sewn with weed drills which would, therefore, not be required for a few years. The committee recommended that five experienced men from their own ranks — Nahum Kurman, Isaac Sair, Moses Fishtrom, Joshua Shinkorevsky and A. Colomesky — be assigned the task of sewing the land at a cost of about $100.

Next: Some settlers leave, others arrive.

Spanish tourism director tries to mollify effect of nation's anti-Zionism vote in UN

Dear Editor:

In your Oct. 31 issue a large advertisement appeared, sponsored by a number of travel agencies, in which the recommendation was made that Jewish people should abstain from travelling to several countries, Spain included, because of the vote in the United Nations against Zionism.

Regarding the above, I should like to point out the following:

1. Spain joined the United States and some other countries in an attempt to postpone the discussion of the resolution that classified Zionism as a form of racism until the next General Assembly in 1976.

2. The Spanish delegation was absent at the moment of the vote.

3. An important number of Jews from Arabic countries, especially from Morocco and Algeria, have settled in Spain, mostly in the south around the town of Malaga.

4. The Jewish community in Spain is every day more important and prosperous.

5. There is no resentment or discrimination against Jews in my country, as unfortunately still happens sometimes, even in the nations of the Western world.

6. Finally, I would like to remind you that during the last war the government of Spain saved, in extremely difficult conditions, the lives of thousands and thousands of Sephardic Jews.

Julian Sanchez-Martin,
director,
Spanish National Tourist Office,
Toronto.

Search for Betty

Dear Editor:

I recently returned from a trip to Russia and while in Odessa was asked to locate the daughter of the late Dr. Morris (Moshe ben Baruch) Snyder, who came to Toronto from Strostinetz, Russia, in 1912, and died in 1930. They seem to think that the daughter's name is Betty, after her grandfather Baruch. The aunt, a sister-in-law of Dr. Snyder and her children, showed me a picture of the mass grave where the father of Dr. Snyder, who was killed in the 1919 pogroms, lies buried.

This is an extremely fine family, and they are desperately anxious to contact the daughter of Dr. Snyder. I promised I would do my utmost to assist them in this.

I would be exceedingly grateful to anyone who can give me any information regarding the whereabouts of Betty. My telephone number is 787-7136.

Rose Ehrenworth,

Toronto expands facilities for resurgence in centuries-old ritual of mikveh

By TOBA KORENBLUM
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO —
While Jewish feminists may flinch and label it an anachronism, there appears to be a resurgence in a centuries-old ritual which applies restrictions to married life and sexual activities — the purity laws and mikveh.

Toronto's largest mikveh, a circular $150,000 structure at Sheppard and Hove, opened five years ago and now serves some 350 women regularly, says Rabbi Gedalia Felder, one of a committee of Orthodox rabbis who oversee its kashruth.

But a strain on the facility, now housing six private baths, has alerted the Orthodox community to the need for expanding the mikveh. A building fund now underway is hoping to raise $60,000 to add an additional four baths to the centre, named for its benefactors, Israel and Goldie Koschitzky.

(Two other mikvot, located in the Lubavitch Community Centre on Edinburgh and Bathurst, and the Bais Yaakov Elementary School on Stormont, also serve Toronto's Orthodox women, on a smaller scale.)

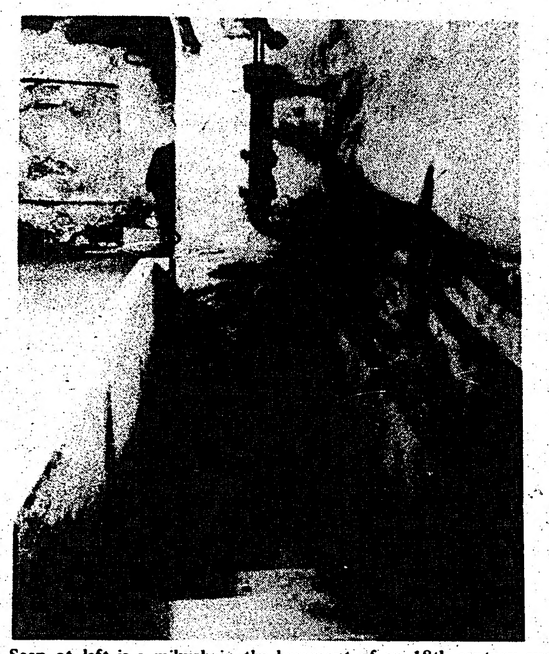
Mikveh, literally "a collection of water", has traditionally served several purposes: as a voluntary ritual purification for men before holidays, as the last step in conversion to Judaism and for the immersion of utensils purchased from non-Jews. But, today, it is mainly employed by the menstrual wife.

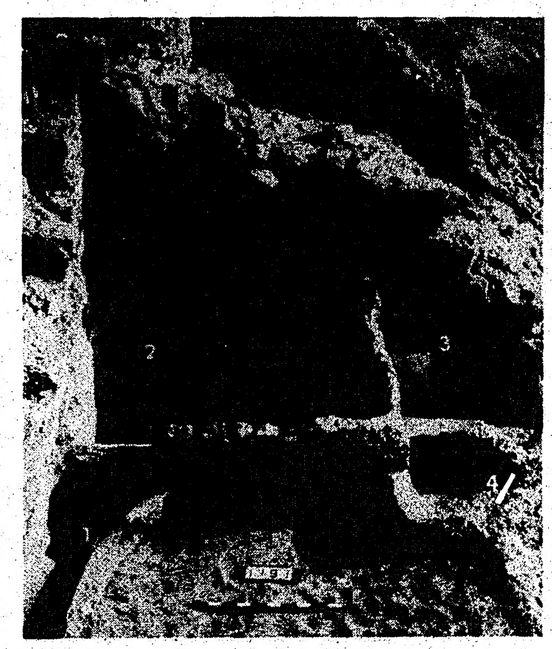
The origin of mikveh goes back to Leviticus and since then the ritual purity laws have been codified and detailed. For about 12 days a married couple must abstain from sexual activity. Each month on the first day of her menstrual flow a wife is rendered "niddah" (impure). Sexual relations are forbidden for the five "unclean" days of the menses and the seven consecutive "clean" days, when a woman must examine herself internally, twice daily, for any discharge. Following this 12-day minimum period the woman must cleanse herself, remove all jewelry and immerse herself in a mikveh before she may renew sexual relations.

Niddah imposes a commitment many may think severe. As well as forbidding intercourse, the ritual when strictly interpreted, denies caressing, or displays of affection, eating from the same dish, sitting in close proximity or exposing one's body before the spouse.

With the ferment among Jewish feminists over the second-class status of women within their culture and religion, it is obvious the mikveh ritual with its strictures on married life would be attacked as "unkosher" for the modern woman.

Said the Jewish Feminist Organization recently in Response magazine: "It is difficult to avoid the implication that we are dealing here with the potent residue of an ancient taboo based on a mixture of male fear, awe and repugnance towards woman's creative biological cycle."





Seen at left is a mikveh in the basement of an 18th century synagogue in Carpentras, France. In Toronto, the $150,000 structure now serves 350 women on a regular basis. At right is mikveh in Masada. (1) is plastered conduit. (2) is pool for collecting rainwater. (3) is the actual mikveh connected to (2) by pipe. (4) is pool for washing hands and feet before entering the mikveh.

But the rabbis, and the women who partake in the monthly ritual, disagree. The laws, rather than unbearably rigid, can lead to healthier, happier and more exciting sex lives, those interviewed confirmed. The mitzvah is not observed for that reason, they say, but it has that positive side-effect nevertheless.

The mikveh ritual, a fundamental part of Torah, says Rabbi Mordechai Ochs, "creates harmony in the family, raising the relationship between husband and wife. The very fact parties don't have each other readily available assures that life is a constant courtship."

Colleague Rabbi Felder concurs: "The actual renewal of marriage bonds every month makes sexual life something more sacred." In reaction to the criticisms levelled by the feminists, Rabbi Felder adds, "the woman is free, not a prisoner. By right she is given the choice of whether to resume sexual relations."

Long before the age of women's liberation, Judaism recognized women's sexual needs. The Orthodox Jewish marriage contract, Rabbi Felder points out, explicitly states the husbands obligation to provide sexual satisfaction to his wife, just as he must provide food and clothing.

Nancy Friedberg, a wife of seven years, attends the Sheppard mikveh regularly, and insists the ritual does not infringe on her lifestyle. "Others try to give more palatable reasons for going to the mikveh," she says. "That it elevates the emotional, sexual relations might very well be true, but I go because the Torah says I should go."

Claims another user: "It's like being a bride again. Having to control the sexual activity actually enhances it. It in no way detracts from the relationship."

Interestingly enough, an American marriage counsellor who designed a pilot study on women who frequented mikvehs, found its therapeutic benefits to be true. Her results, presented at the annual meeting of the American Association of Marriage and Family Counsellors, showed mikveh had a positive effect for every couple studied.

The mikveh of today has remained true to the prototype of the Mishnah and Talmud. The pool of water must conform to the exact specifications laid down by rabbis thousands of years ago. Among other things, it must be derived from natural spring water; it must contain a minimum volume of 180 gallons and it must be watertight.

But while the modern mikveh of today, like Toronto's structure, is outfitted with private showers, bathrooms, dryers, sauna, carpets, and dressing rooms, it still preserves an ancient and unbroken biblical tradition. It is constructed according to the same requirements of Jewish law as the oldest extant mikveh — on top of a high hill in Israel, on Masada.

Flight into the past offers chance to relax

By J.B. SALSBERG

At last, dear readers, we are ready to escape the disturbing affairs of our times and seek mental and emotional rest in a flight into our own past, in the new world.

Take your seats, please. Make your self comfortable. Let your arms hang limply by your sides. Relax. Try not to think or talk, it will be easier that way to escape reality. Watch how uncle Eliezer has settled in. His head leans back, his eyes are shut and a pleasant smile is resting on his lips. Try to imitate him. That's good! We're off...

We are heading towards the shteeble that my late father and some 20 or 30 other pious Jewish immigrants established as their place of worship and spiritual anchor in the new world. It came into existence 60 odd years ago and was located on Chestnut Street, in the centre of the old Ward, close to Dundas Street (then known as Agnes Street and in the heart of the growing Jewish community of Eastern European Jews.)

A shteeble, as I explained earlier to you, is the diminutive of shtub (room or house) and which refers to a small, unadorned congregation of followers of a given Chassidic Rebbe, or of members of a specific occupation (in the old country) like tailors etc., or of an unbranded small collective of men united by a specific dedication. (Such a shteeble was also referred to as a kloiz in some parts of Eastern Europe.)

Unlike most other congregations of that period ours was not composed of landsleit. In those days when the "Hebrews," as the WASPS then called us, were enlarging their enclave in the decomposing Ward, the landsleit synagogues and shteeblech sprouted from storefronts, tired cottages and a variety of surplus, small church buildings.

There were the Polish (Poylishe), Galician (Galicianer), Romanian (Romainishe), Russian (Roosishe), etc. and a proliferation of Apter, Radomer, Minsker, Kiever, Lagover, Stashover, Narayever, Kielcer etc. etc. etc. synagogues & shteeblech that pinpointed the place of origin of the congregants. (Can you imagine how many shul presidents, vice presidents, Gaboim, treasurers etc. the community was enriched by?)

Anyway, our was not like the rest of the shteeblech or synagogues. We were different. We knew it and so did that portion of the newly arrived who took an interest in such matters. It was because of our difference that we are nicknamed — the salvation army...

First, we didn't choose members by their place of origin. We had them from all over the map, but mainly from Poland. In all honesty, though, I must confess that I had a sneaking suspicion that the ringleaders in our shteeble were the followers of the Chassidic Rebbe of Casomir (Koozmerer Chassidim). My late father and his bossom pal, Reb Pinches Ruback, were very staunch "Koozmprer."

Second, the small band that started our shteeble (though the wives and sizeable flock of children made it into a goodly crowd) were determined to make no concessions to either "American" influences or to the more dangerous encroachments that came from Jewish sources whom we labelled as either the "apikorsim" (heretics) or as the "freiyeh" (unbelievers). The founders of our shteeble wanted no tempering with anything they considered as basic, according to "din" (law), custom or tradition.

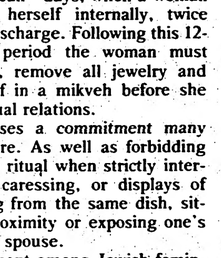
Thus it came to pass that our shteeble, bearing so kosher and meaningful a name as Tomchai Shabes (supporters of the Sabbath), was tolerantly referred to as the salvation army. In the eyes of many newcomers the very visible brand of marching and singing Christians, The Salvation Army was considered an extremist variety of that religion. The "Chevre Tomchai Shabes" was, evidently, also considered to be an extremist offshoot of the Jewish religious tree. Believe it or not, but I distinctly recall being called "a salvation armynick" by some adult smart-aleks. (This may explain why I retain a soft spot for the real Salvation Army to this day.)

But enough of this. We have arrived at the corner of Agnes (Dundas) and Chestnut Streets. We now turn southward on Chestnut and pass two or three stores on the east side of the street. We also pass the Shomrai Shabes synagogue, that didn't mean much to us in those days because it was a Galicianer shul and because it had many members whose faces were shaven. Now we come to a full stop. Separated only by a rather ample side entrance from the Shomrai Shabes stood our shteeble, stood Tomchai Shabes, stood our citadel against the ramming and battering forces from the outside.

Before leading you inside that citadel I feel that I must, for the sake of posterity, describe the outside appearance of that bastion of uncompromising, old world Yiddishkeit.

So take it easy until next week.

sparks from the torah



By RABBI MEIR GOTTESMAN

Parshat Shemot

L'maan ya'ameenu ki nir'ah ailecha Hashem...that they may believe that the L—rd hath appeared to thee...

You need more than clean ears to hear well — you have to listen with your heart...

Once Rabbi Dov Ber of Lubavitch was so engrossed over his gemara, he didn't hear his baby fall out of the crib in the next room and begin crying. But the grandfather — Rabbi Schneer Zalman — who was studying upstairs, heard the child and ran down. Afterwards, he scolded Reb Dov Ber — "listen, even when your studying Torah, if you don't notice someone crying, it's no good..." (Mee'Mayanot Hanetzach)

Today every Jew feels like crying — what sin did we commit that 72 nations voted to destroy us and who knows what other heretofore secret enemies wait in the wings? But there's crying and there's crying. We have to cry like Jews...

What do I mean? When Pharaoh's daughter opened the basket, she saw a baby crying, and announced — "mi'yaldai ha'Ivrim zeh — this is one of the Jewish children..." But how did she know, was he wearing a UJA button? But she heard that mixed in the crying was tikvah — hope — not despair, and that's the only kosher crying a Jew is allowed... (Reb Mordechai Chaim of Slonim)

We Jews will still be here when Idi and Mao are long forgotten. But...the truth is we're not handling things right, either — we're not using all our weapons. Consider...when Moses saw an Egyptian attacking a Jew, va'yach et ha'Mitzri — he smote him. But what did Moses use, a Phantom, a hand-grenade? Listen...one view is that he used his fists, another that he struck him with a brick-making tool... but the final consensus is that he pronounced the Shaim Hameforash Ineffable Name. (Midrash)

We Jews have used our fists...we've knocked the Arabs down four times, but they bounce back like rubber ducks. We've used the brick-making tool...look what Israel has built up in the middle of rocks and sand. But her people are still being so strangled economically it's a pachad...

But the strongest defence we've let lag — we haven't used the Shaim Hameforash. We haven't yet earned the z'chus — righteous merit — to have G—d serve as the Invincible Shield of Israel, so we no longer have to tremble to watch the news and see what new outrages have occurred against our people.

There is an incredibly powerful prayer missile we Jews have which not only can protect our brethren in Israel, but is a powerful segulah to help every Jew solve his own most critical personal needs — heal the sick, earn an adequate parnasah, prevent our children inter-marrying, patch up broken homes.

It is the book of Tehilim, the Psalms of King David. Even if this writer had the space of 10 columns, it would not be adequate to describe the immense holiness of Tehillim. It was written with ruach hakodesh, the holy spirit. Imagine...the last letter of the first five words of the book of Exodus — "V'alleh shemot b'nai Yisrael ha'bolm — spell T'HLIM...to teach, whenever a Jew is enslaved by tzorus, Tehillim can redeem him.

Below is a sacred schedule of Tehillim for the month of Shevat, which begins Shabbat Jan. 3. Use it. If you can't read Hebrew, read them in English. Pour out your heart to G—d and He will answer.

Shabbat Shalom.

22nd Zionist Congress became divider of history

Landmark Events In Our History

By ROCHELLE CARR

TORONTO —
There are moments in history that lend themselves to being used as dividing lines. Such is the case of the 22nd Zionist Congress held in Basle, Switzerland from Dec. 9 to 24, 1946.

The 21st Congress was convened on Aug. 16, 1939, on the very eve of World War II. The 23rd Congress met on Aug. 14, 1951 in the first Jewish state created in almost 2,000 years.

The group that met at the intervening Congress was still reeling from the events of the past few years. From the time German bombs fell on Warsaw, resulting in the outbreak of World War II, to the German unconditional surrender, another chapter was written in the annals of history that resounded with the excessive losses of human lives and material resources.

The Zionists that met at Basle in 1946 had lived through a war that is estimated to have cost more than one trillion dollars just to wage. Military casualties would be placed around 10 million killed with an additional 10 million disabled, of which Germany and Russia sustained the heaviest losses.

And, while the cold December wind whistled outside, the Zionist delegates huddled together in the convention room and, with heads hung in grief, discussed another terrible loss — the methodical murder of millions of civilians which included approximately six million Jews.

Nevertheless, all the events that caused despair also gave rise to an even firmer resolve. The almost total destruction of Europe's Jews reinforced the will of the Zionists at the 22nd Congress, even more, to see that a Jewish state would be created.

And, of course, the one thought that ran hauntingly through their minds was that if there had been a Jewish state in 1939, such massive carnal destruction could have, at least, been greatly reduced. They knew they had to ensure that the past could not be repeated.

In 1939 Weizmann closed the 21st Congress with the prayer that "we will all meet again alive." The opening of the 22nd Congress had shown his hope not to be fulfilled. The sessions, themselves, which included over 50 lengthy speeches and numerous shorter ones, seemed noteworthy only in emphasizing divisions within the Zionist ranks.

But history would take note of a more important aspect of the 22nd Congress. It would be the last Congress to be included in the almost 2,000-year chapter of the wandering Jew.

Jewishness of Harry Pollock surfaces in novel Gabriel

By JENIVA BERGER

"Who is Harry Pollock and what is he doing writing a book like this anyhow?"

Harry Pollock himself asks the question and, with the true elan of a man who spent years in the field of advertising, sets out to answer it as well.

His recently published book Gabriel is described as a picaresque romp through the childhood and adolescence of the son of Polish-Jewish immigrants in the Toronto of the '30s, the Toronto Pollock knew and grew up in.

"But," he says smoothly, "the book is a novel, the character isn't really me, though some of the things in the book had an actual genesis."

Of his years at Harbord Collegiate from which he graduated in 1939 with top honors, Pollock says, "academically, I was almost brilliant, especially in languages." (Later, I put in my notes that he is part braggart, soldier, part Don Quixote, fighting the establishment windmills gently. It was Pollock who brought in the first edition of Henry Miller in a brown paper wrapper and smuggled Ulysses into the country.)

After Harbord Collegiate came a variety of odd jobs, but Pollock, who was a writer at heart, set his sights on the then WASP bastions of advertising where he was turned down time after time with a polite, "You wouldn't be happy here.

"Finally at the last place I applied," he recalls, "I got up against the back wall and assumed a Jesus pose." He demonstrates. "The guy was very upset. He thought I had a fit."

Pollock started his own ad agency. "I was there for 20 years. Then I just left. I decided life was short and precious and there comes a time when a person has to find out what he has to contribute, if anything."

He was immediately hired as a curator for the Anglo-Irish collection at McMaster University where he had a "nice two years."

As a young man, Pollock struck up a love affair with the Dublin writer, James Joyce, which led to his forming the James Joyce Society. He's also a Fellow at York's Stong College where he gives a weekly Joyce tutorial.

"Joyce pushed my horizons back. You can't read a line of Joyce without becoming part of his intellectual baggage." Says Pollock, who never went on to university himself: "In order to understand Joyce better I read all the books Joyce read. That gave me my education."

Out of the Joyce years came an exceptional literary collection, three plays Pollock wrote, one of which was performed at the Abbey Theatre and involvement in the still remembered production of Ulysses in Nighttown in which Pollock played Joyce's endearing Irish everyman, Leopold Bloom.

When it came to his own contribution to the literary world, style, as it had been important to Joyce became important to Pollock, too.

"I began to see where the world had progressed in terms of literary design. I tried to make each word mean something."

The subject matter was a different story. "The Jewish content never surfaced during my Joyce trip," Pollock says candidly. "It was out of context. But everyone goes back to their roots."

During the interview, Pollock's gentle wife, Vera, waits and visits in the other room while Harry and I talk. Harry pulls in a small stipend from his ad business but Vera went out to work so he could afford to write. Years ago, I recall Pollock renting a big billboard on Bathurst Street on which he paid tribute to his wife in honor of a wedding anniversary. It was a marvellously theatrical gesture, beautifully schmaltzy and genuinely sincere; very much Harry Pollock.

Harry Pollock, author of highly-acclaimed "Gabriel", novel about Toronto Jewry of '30s.

ask the rabbi

Is burial at sea allowed for Jews?

The traditional law demands not merely that the body be disposed of. If that were the case it would, indeed, be in order for a body to be buried at sea. But the law is that the body must be buried in the earth.

The discussion regarding burial in tractate Sanhedrin (46b) takes it for granted, on the basis of the biblical references to "burial", that it means in the ground. One need only quote the earliest biblical reference to burial: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Genesis 3:19).

STATS ON INTERMARRIAGE

Statistics Canada recently released data on intermarriage here that is rather revealing. The information indicates 2,065 marriages took place in Canada in 1972 in which both the bride and groom were Jewish. There were 752 marriages in which one partner only was Jewish. And for both Jewish brides and grooms marrying out of the faith, the preferred spouse was a Roman Catholic. The Jewish female may have a slight edge over her male counterpart, since the total number of brides was 2,361 compared to 1,521 grooms.

FRATERNAL SENIOR CLUB

An interesting piece of Canadiana has emerged in the publication of a biography, Pauline Donalda — The Life and Career of a Canadian Prima Donna. Pauline Donalda? Few may know that Madame Donalda (born Pauline Lighstone), who spearheaded Montreal's Opera Guild, actually sang with Caruso following her debut in Nice in 1904. The recollections of the Jewish chanteuse, who died in 1970, have been recorded by Ruth C. Brotman under the sponsorship of the Canadian Jewish Congress and the Opera Guild of Montreal. The book is based on the prima donna's recollections as told to the author, with additional background information from her scrapbooks and other memorabilia. (Copies may be obtained from CJC, Montreal).

Four of the 11 people awarded the Nobel Prize this year, either jointly or singly, are Jewish. Dr. David Baltimore of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Dr. Howard Temin of the University of Wisconsin shared the prize in medicine; Dr. Ben Mottelson, a Danish citizen, took the physics award and Dr. Leonid Kantorovich of the Soviet Union received the economic science award.

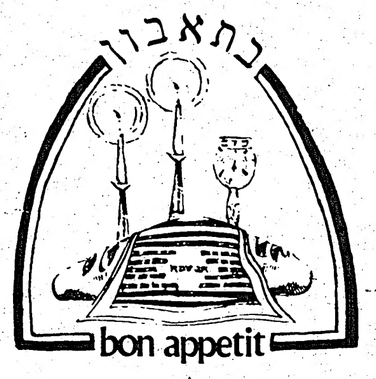
It may be hard for some women to part with their personal jewels, but when the woman is Golda Meir and the reason is a charity auction in aid of the Soldiers' Welfare Association, it's easy to understand. Each of the former Israeli prime minister's jewelry pieces — watches, brooches, chains and medallions — was accompanied by a signed letter expressing her pleasure at "our mutual contribution to the soldiers."

Western world not as nutrition conscious as Israel



By MARCIA KRETZMER

JERUSALEM — Over the last 20 years, the famous nutritionist, the late Adelle Davis did much to make us aware of the importance of educating ourselves in the do's and don'ts of sound eating habits. She has shown that if we lack this education, which is often quite technical and involved, many of us suffer, quite literally, from malnutrition.

One of the chapters in her Let's Eat Right to Keep Fit, (Unwin Books, 1974) which made a special impression on me, was the one on the "best — fed nation" myth. Ms. Davis, who was referring specifically to the U.S., described the refining and over-processing of bakery products, which are misleadingly advertized as being made with "enriched" flour, whereas the reverse is true.

She documented the enormous increase in "foodless foods" — soft drinks, packaged cereals, candies, snacks and tidbits, which have had a disastrous effect on the nation's health. She pointed to the increasing and alarming effects of chemical fertilizers and food additives on bodily functions.

She also makes clear her preference for good food over supplements and pills. The question is: what is good food, and how to obtain it in a situation where the foods that are available in the stores are becoming progressively deficient in the nutrients they once supplied?

We all know milk products are good for us and grains are good for us, but how can we obtain them when the market is saturated with goods such as oversweetened, artificially thickened and flavored travesties of yoghurt, highly-colored slices of processed cheese of plastic consistency, packaged cereals, pathetically low or entirely lacking in any essential nutrient, and bread which has had the wheat-germ refined out of it because it does not promote shelf-life.

In the "less advanced" countries, people do not have to be experts on nutrition because their diets which evolved over centuries, subject to climate and resources, are the product of accumulated wisdom, and they seem to supply every required nutrient.

The Yemenite community was enthusiastically studied when it first arrived in Israel. Physicians, social scientists and nutritionists were impressed by the unusual longevity and productivity of Yemenite Jews, their sound muscle tone, good teeth and eyesight and almost complete lack of incidence of the degenerative diseases, in particular, heart disease.

Unfortunately their diet, which used to consist of unrefined cereal products, pulses, organ meats and dairy foods, has now changed, so that both it and the current Yemenite death profile, more nearly approach that of the rest of the Israeli population.

Nevertheless, I have come to the conclusion that by and large, people can eat better and be healthier in Israel, which does not have large industrial food concerns with massive advertizing budgets, than in the "advanced" Western countries.

Compare the nutritional value of the North American hot dog, soaked in mustard or ketchup and served in a dead, white, soft roll, with a felafel, made with highly nutritious chickpeas, and served in a pitta with a chopped salad of fresh cucumber, tomato and parsley.

Compare the youths from Israel's poorer families strolling along the streets and munching sunflower seeds (a half cup contains as much protein and more iron than two eggs) with "privileged" North American kids eating a candy bar, a bag of marshmallows or salted snacks, which contain, at best, only a trace of any kind of nutrient.

Compare workers pausing for a break on a construction site or in a canteen. In the one case: a soft drink, machine dispensed coffee or soup, a hot dog, or sandwich made with the most debased ingredients. In Israel: black beer — a naturally fermented, non-alcoholic drink made with vegetables, herbs and malt, fresh yoghurt with no additives or thickening, probably half a loaf of black bread, olives, tomatoes, peppers, cucumbers and white cheese.

Few Israelis can be nutritional experts but most are competent judges of good food — a faculty missing in the populations of the industrialized West, whose tastes have become progressively debased through pernicious advertizing and the sheer unavailability of delicious, healthy food.

Is Israel a deprived, under-developed country compared to the privileged West? Maybe it is — but long may it remain that way!

Shabbat Shalom!

Phil Stone to conduct publicity seminar

TORONTO — Phil Stone, writer and broadcaster, will conduct a one-day publicity seminar, sponsored by the Federation of Jewish Women's Organizations, on Wednesday, Jan. 14 at Holy Blossom Temple.

The seminar, the first to be held under FJWO auspices in several years, is primarily aimed at presidents and officers responsible for publicity in its more than 50 constituent organizations and sisterhoods. The FJWO was organized under the auspices of the United Jewish Fund of Toronto.

Stone is on the faculty of Humber College of Applied Arts and Technology and is program coordinator of radio broadcasting for the community college.

A top-notch panel recruited from the media, will take part in the session which begins at 9:30 a.m. and runs through 1 p.m. Participants are John Spragge, CFRB program director; Lotta Dempsey, Toronto Star feature writer; and Phyllis Switzer, vice-president of CITY-TV.

"The seminar will attempt to deal in practical terms, with the 'dos and don'ts' of working with the media," Phil Stone explained. "The ability to recognize what is newsworthy and knowing how to go about getting space in the press is what concerns most publicity representatives of organizations." Registration fee is $2. Travel

Miami Beach has long been famous for its exciting night life as evidenced by the scene at a French revue. During the winter season, the top Miami Beach hotels feature superstar entertainers who complement the French and Latin revues. (Miami Beach)

Resort enriched by art museum

MIAMI BEACH —
The Bass Museum of Art, 2100 Collins Avenue, Miami Beach, has taken its place among prime points of interest both for visitors and residents of this city. A steady stream of viewers of all ages has been filing through the wide front doors to see the fine collection of masterpieces.

The city-operated museum, housing the multi-million dollar Bass collection, formerly comprised the Miami Beach Library and Art Centre. It was reconstructed in 1964 at a cost of $160,000 and has been improved and enriched since then. The museum provides the last word in lighting and a stereo system throughout the building.

The collection, donated to the City of Miami Beach by Mr. and Mrs. John Bass of New York and Miami Beach, comprises paintings ranging from such old Masters as Botticelli, Rubens, Franz Hals, Renoir, Gainsborough, Van Gogh, El Greco, and modern artists such as Modigliani, Guillaumin, Rouault and Picasso.

There are numerous examples of wood sculpture, dating back to the 14th century, and two of the largest and finest hunting tapestries in the world as well as the magnificent Gothic tapestry formerly in the J.P. Morgan tapestry collection, originally owned by the archbishop of Canterbury and the king of England.

The hunting tapestries, made in Malines, Belgium over 100 years ago, are 40 by 16 feet. They depict The Start of the Hunt and The Return from the Hunt. They occupy two walls in the Tapestry Room which was built for this purpose.

This room is lighted by a magnificent Venetian chandelier, donated by the Bass family, which shines against a background of ruby velvet. The other two galleries where the collection has been placed are hung respectively with celadon green and gold velvet.

A favorite of visitors is a magnificent Rubens, St. Anne and the Holy Family, recently loaned to the Royal Museum of Beaux Arts of Belgium for an international Rubens exposition. The masterpiece is now back at the Bass Museum.

The museum also houses a large number of old church objects and vestments of the medieval and baroque period plus a large collection of Tibetan bronzes. In addition, there is a large collection of ancient gold, silver and bronze coins; examples of old Brussel lace, some fine embroidered French costumes of the Roccoco period; musical autographs, manuscripts and first editions of the great classical composers such as Bach, Mozart, Haydn and Beethoven.

The museum, with more than 500 exhibits, is open free to the public from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m., daily, Tuesday through Saturday; closed Sundays, Mondays and holidays.

Floral delivery observes 30th anniversary

NEW YORK —
As the United States celebrates its Bicentennial in 1976, an international service based on an American idea will be observing its 30th anniversary — Interflora, the worldwide floral delivery network.

Flowers-by-wire was created in 1910 when a handful of American florists founded Florists' Telegraph Delivery (FTD) to provide their customers with an intercity delivery service in the U.S. and Canada.

Similar local organizations later were created in Europe, Great Britain and other parts of the world but plans to establish an international service were interrupted by World War II.

However, after the war, in 1946 at a meeting in Copenhagen, Denmark, the world's three major floral delivery organizations joined together to form Interflora. They were FTD (now called Florists' Transworld Delivery), Interflora British Unit, and Fleurop-Interflora.

Interflora today has more than 44,000 member florists in 130 countries so that flowers and plants can be delivered to virtually any place in the world. Its headquarters is in Zurich, Switzerland.

One of the keys to the service's growth and success has been the Fleurin, an unminted currency used by florists to transmit the value of floral orders from one country to another.

Each Interflora member knows the value of the Fleurin in his own country's currency. He converts the value to Fleurins when he sends orders overseas to another Interflora florist. The second florist converts the Fleurins black to his own nation's currency and makes up and delivers the floral gift accordingly.

Rabin still determined to boycott Council debate

the Arab states for taking this line, and for joining in the condemnation of Israel for attacking Palestinian camps in Lebanon. The Swedish newspaper Expressen writes: "This might have the result that Sweden will lose old friends but gain new ones."

Dan Halperin, adviser to Israel's finance ministry on the Arab boycott, is in London for the second time in five months. The main reason he told the JCNS, was that things were not getting better, and Britain was still the weakest link among the nine Common Market countries so far as resistance by companies to Arab pressure was concerned.

Described as one of Israel's "most brilliant young civil servants," Halperin has for some months been leading a special team whose task it is to conduct the counter-attack against the Arab boycott. His visit is part of a wider tour of EEC countries where he is meeting existing organizations, such as our own Anti-Arab Boycott Co-ordination Committee, as well as journalists, to explain that the fear of the boycott could do and, especially in Britain, did — much more harm than its actual operation and efficiency warranted.

Purge war criminals from jobs: Klarsfeld sentiments today, 30 years after the fiery destruction of the Third Reich. But she assured her listeners that "I am not willing to let this happen."

She remarked that neither young Germans nor young Jews know enough about the Holocaust. To German youth, World War II is like any other war, she said. Jews must remember the Holocaust because only then will they "have the power" to counter anti-Semitism and anti-Zionism.

Prof. Emil Fackenheim, of the University of Toronto's philosophy department, responding to her address, called Mrs. Klarsfeld an "amazing and incredible" woman with an "extraordinary sense of responsibility touched by divine guidance."

Referring to the anti-Israel atmosphere at the United Nations and other international forums, Fackenheim said that although Jews are "very much alone," they can gain strength from Mrs. Klarsfeld's shining example.

The meeting was sponsored by the B'nai Brith Hillel Foundation and the Students Administrative Council.

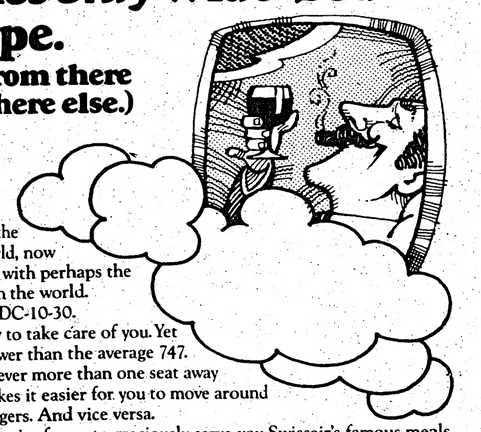
Swissair flies only wide-bodied jets to Europe.
(And from there to almost everywhere else.)



Swissair, the airline many international businessmen rate the most service oriented in the world, now presents Canadian businessmen with perhaps the most comfort oriented aircraft in the world.
The wide-bodied Swissair DC-10-30.
It flies with a 747-size crew to take care of you. Yet it carries about 90 passengers fewer than the average 747.
Even in economy, you're never more than one seat away from a spacious aisle. Which makes it easier for you to move around without disturbing other passengers. And vice versa.
And makes it easier for us to graciously serve you Swissair's famous meals (with real china, glassware, and flatware in accompaniment).
Only Swissair flies wide-bodied jets direct from Toronto/Montreal to Zurich, Switzerland, the heart of downtown Europe.
And from there, we serve Eastern Europe, the Middle East, Africa, and even China.
